

September 13, 2005

Dear Laura,

I want you to know the gift you gave to my family through words you wrote long ago in This Timeless Moment.

My 33-year-old daughter M. was diagnosed with colon cancer nearly two years ago. She suffered from unmanageable pain for the last several months in spite of incredibly high doses of a plethora of narcotics and other pain medications. The only respite from her anguish came through the use of psychedelic therapy with MDMA (Ecstasy).

The final session came on Saturday when she was too weak even to swallow pills. Awakening her was nearly impossible, but she managed to hear me ask if she wanted to take Ecstasy and mustered all of her strength to say "yes" before she went back to her restless sleep—gasping for breath, moaning, convulsive tics, and contracting facial muscles. Over the next hour, her breathing became steady and her body became peaceful. This I expected, but I also assumed that, as in previous sessions, she would become alert, present, and joyful, like the daughter I knew before pain took over her life. However I could not awaken her even during the peak of MDMA activity. It seemed that she would never wake up again.

M.'s dad joined us when I told him this news. We spent the next few hours doing what we did when M. was awake—telling stories, playing games, and stroking her lovingly. Just before 10 PM I decided to read your chapter "O Nobly Born" from This Timeless Moment. I didn't get very far, only to the second page. The last paragraph I read was this one:

"All too often, unconscious or dying people are treated as if they were "things," as though they were not there. But often they are very much there. Although a dying person has fewer and fewer means of expressing what he feels, he is still open to receiving communication. In this sense the very sick or the dying person is much like a child: he cannot tell us how he feels, but he is absorbing our feeling, our voice, and, most of all, our touch. In the infant the greatest channel of communication is the skin. Similarly, for the individual plunged in the immense solitude of sickness and death, the touch of a hand can dispel that solitude, even warmly illuminate that unknown universe. To the "nobly born" as to the "nobly dying," skin and voice communication may make an immeasurable difference."

As I spoke your words, M.'s dad stroked her hair and held her hand. I believe there was magic in those words and their enactment through our voice and touch. M. now knew that her parents accepted the immanence of her death, that her death could be noble, and that she need not feel alone in her passage. She lifted her chin, opened her mouth and eyes wide with an expression of absolute wonder, shed tears, and reached out to touch her dad. The next moment she was gone: the light in her eyes went out, her face turned stark white, and her body became infinitely still. There was no question that her spirit had left her body. M. let us know she heard and felt us. Your words and our actions gave her permission to say goodbye and gave us a the opportunity to witness the awe of her timeless moment of death.

Your words made an immeasurable difference to us. Thank you.

With Deep Gratitude,
M.H.

Limited Edition Prints Signed by Dean Chamberlain and Laura Huxley

We are pleased to present the second print in a special signed and numbered limited edition of prints selected from Dean Chamberlain's Psychedelic Pioneers Series, his portrait of Laura Huxley. This portrait was shot in 1997 in Laura's home in Los Angeles.

This edition of prints was created to help fund MAPS-sponsored research into psychedelic-assisted psychotherapy in people struggling with the mystery of death, Laura and Aldous Huxley pioneered the use of psychedelics to enhance awareness during the dying process, as described in This Timeless Moment, by Laura Huxley. 50% of the profits from the sale of these prints will go towards this research, with a minimum of $25,000.

There are only 50 of these beautiful archival pigment prints. The image is 11" x 14" and is printed on fine-art matte paper. Prints numbers 1–10 are offered at $1000 each. (3 sold, 17 available). Prints numbered 11–40 are offered at $1500 each. Prints numbered 41–50 are offered at $2000 each. Please visit the MAPS online bookstore or call the MAPS office to purchase one of these prints.

Dean Chamberlain developed his light painting technique, which involves working with his camera and subject in darkened spaces, in 1977. These images are created entirely in the camera. To see more of Dean Chamberlain's artwork, go to www.deanchamberlain.com